Eve More Ape-Like Than Adam, British Scientist Declares

LONDON — Women resembles the ape more than does man, so it seems to Dr. Arthur Thomson, eminent British anatomist professor in that science at Oxford university since 1893.

In making his assertion before the Royal Academy Dr. Thomson said the basis for his statement was that man's legs are usually shorter and his arms longer than man's.

It is only conceit which makes man kind believe it is not descended from the ape, he continued. Although generations have wrought great changes in anatomy the similarities are too great to be ignored. Furthermore he contended a baby until it can walk "resembles the ape in nearly every respect."

Mr. and Mrs. R. Morrison, of Edmonton, who have been living here for some months, have returned to their home in the city on account of a change in work for Mr. Morrison.

FIRE CHIEF'S CAR GOES UP IN SMOKE

On Saturday night last, fire was discovered in the garage at the back of Fire-chief Richardson's home on Sixth avenue shortly after ten o'clock.

The alarm was quickly given and neighbors rushed to render assistance (owing to the genial Joe being down town). It was found that the actual fire was in the seats of the car itself, and the vehicle was soon dragged out of the building and a few pails of water put things to rights; not however until the whole of the interior fittings of the auto and the top had been turned into a total wreck. From what we learn the cause of the outbreak is a complete mystery, as the car had not been in use for some days. Only a little insurance was carried.

GEOLOGIST WRITES CONTRASTING OIL AREAS IN ALBERTA

Last year Mr. William Miller, of Vancouver, who was recently here on an Australian-born geologist with a great reputation, made an investigation of the geology of the oil regions of Alberta which has resulted in a review of some of the old notions concerning these areas. Some of the new notions, if tried out in oil development should create a revolution in the theories of the oil deposits of the Canadian northwest, and Mr. Miller intimated an outline of his opinions, based upon considerable professional work relative to the Alberta oilfields.

He holds that the most important centre of oil development in Alberta will likely be in the Fabyan-Wainwright region, for the reason that what he regards as "the greatest phenomenon of its kind" is constituted by the Athabasca tar sands, covering 2,000 or 3,000 square miles and estimated on official authority to contain 50,000,000,000 (fifty thousand millions) barrels of oil or bitumen. This is generally accepted to be a huge seepage from the Devonian rocks lying hundreds of feet below. From the Arctic circle to the 52nd parallel—that is to say from Fort Norman, Slave Lake, Athabasca, to Wainwright—oil or natural gas has been found in every hole drilled.

At the present time enthusiasm about oil development has very much subsided on account of the over-production; a various oilfield points in the United States but the potential resources of Canada must in Mr. Miller's view be developed regardless of world supplies because on that the future of Canada itself depends. At the present time Canada is importing thirty million dollars' worth of oil products annually ranging from gasoline to fuel oil, and regardless of all considerations is intent upon developing new native resources.

In Mr. Miller's view there are two oil fields in N.W. Canada, being the foothills section of the Rocky Mountains named the Turner Valley field and the Wainwright region both extended in a N.W.-S.E. direction but separated by a huge synclinal trough extending down the centre of the Province; the two may be called the western and eastern fields.

Mr. Miller expressed some difference about voicing an opinion on the Rocky Mountain section, as he considered the structures so enigmatic as to be a terror to the geologists. The foothills of the Rockies are a series of super-imposed folds, overthrusts and faults arising from forces that operated at different geological periods from a south-westerly direction but that all local areas are alike in construction.

"These conditions," Mr. Miller continued, "do not apply to the N.E. area about Fabyan, where the rocks lie flatter, and the Paleozoic limestone which I consider the source of all these hydrocarbons, can be reached a depth of 2,100 to 2,300 feet." He does not hesitate in the slightest degree to hold that the greatest potential oil fields in the British Empire are located in the North-Eastern Alberta and are as yet untapped.

At the regular meeting of the Rebekah Lodge, I.O.O.F. on Thursday evening last the District Deputy President Sister N. Huntington, commended the amalgamation of the Rebekah lodge at Chauvin with the local organization the new aggregation being all now known under the same name and title as was formerly used by the Wainwright sisters.

In addition to the above ceremony, the degree staff put on their interesting initiation ceremony for a new member and at the close of the lodge the social committee served a delicious lunch to a large number of members who turned out on this occasion.

Mrs. Sydenham who was lying sick at the home of Mrs. Johns for some little time has now recovered so as to be able to return to her home again.

Mr. John Ross, who resides at Baxter lake, is hauling out the supplies for a nice lot of improvements at his farm holdings.

Reduction of driving-risks is anticipated in a supplementary wheel on the steering post. It controls the head light changes and the hose that the hands do not have to be removed from the main wheel in making adjustments. The attachment was introduced recently in France.

The usual meeting of the W.L. was held on Saturday last at the home of Mr. A. Robinson when there was a good attendance.

Messrs Pat Adams and Art Uren motored down to Manitowish lake last week end on a shooting trip. We hear they had good luck, too.

The oat crop at the Buffalo Park farm is going through the mill this week a threshing gang from Hughenden having secured this harvest.

Mr. R. Charlton had the misfortune to have a large post fall on his leg, injuring it quite badly. Fortunately no bones were broken in the accident.

You had better leave your order for storm sash at the Atlas yard, so that they can have them made to fit your car. The sashers are now working there starts. Phone Joe Welch, 57.

Mr. W. Withraham, was in town from Irma on business this week.

Mr. W. Reynolds who is working with Mr. T. Schick, has now moved his family to Wainwright.

Mr. Grace Turner received the sad news of the death of her daughter Mrs. Donahue in the States last week.

HARVESTING IN SASK. ABOUT DONE

REGINA — Harvesting is practically completed throughout the province except for a small acreage of flax and some late coarse grains according to reports received by the provincial department of agriculture. Except for the extreme western districts threshing is more advanced in the south than in the northern districts. Taking the province as a whole possibly from 25 to 35 per cent of the threshing is completed. In several districts rain and damp weather last week interfered with threshing operations. Good drying weather would be very welcome. Grades show quite a wide variation.

Canada must look to Eastern Europe for much of its immigration according to Dr. J. W. Edwards, M.P., who delivered the principal address at the Rotary Club on Tuesday afternoon. For this reason the speaker declared, immigration is more than a problem of numbers. It is a problem of the possibilities and advisability of mixing old world and new world racial and cultural characteristics.

"It is a problem of what Canada will be and the history and progress," the speaker said. "We should aim to get selected immigration until our population is fairly balanced in terms of occupation. Unemployment in Canada is not so much the result of an over supply of workers as it is the result of unbalanced production."

Dr. Edwards analysed Canada's needs in the field of immigration stressing the importance of inducing agricultural peoples to come to the Dominion.

Another important source of immigration for Canada, Dr. Edwards continued will be found among the boys of Great Britain. These boys would be brought to Canada, settled with farmers and later settled on land of their own.

The speaker would be capable of learning Canadian methods and when they grow up they will make good voters, he said—Calgary Herald.

ST ANDREW'S PRESBYTERIAN CH. HARVEST THANKSGIVING

St Andrew's Presbyterian Church, celebrated Harvest Thanksgiving last Sunday night with a splendid congregation present. Preaching on Psalm 107:8 "Oh that men would praise the Lord for His goodness," the Rev. G. J. Mackay, the pastor said in part—

"This Psalm was a splendid piece of literature whether we look at it as English prose or Hebrew poetry. The psalmist's inspiration to sing was his appreciation of God's goodness. He traced the mercy of God in every experience of life. He saw God leading His people 'O'er moor and fen and crag and torrent' and every nerve in his body tingled with gratitude and so over and over again he cries out in his song 'Oh that men would praise the Lord for His goodness.'"

The weakness of our age," said the speaker, "was the absence of the spirit of gratitude. We were too apt to claim for ourselves the credit of our great prosperity. Modern civilization was marvellous. It had added to our comfort and enjoyment by its complex organization and its far-reaching activities, but its tendency was to make us forget that God Almighty was the source and the fountain of everything while man and his methods was only the channel. The condemnation of the age was not so much its pride as its ingratitude. The average man was both pessimistic and complaining. He catalogued a long list of political and social evils and he said there was nothing to be thankful for."

"That partial view of life was surely not the last," said the speaker. "We should count our blessings according to the arithmetic of some ideal state in the unknown future but think of them in the light of our failure. It was a characteristic of the child-mind that it always wanted to know how much further it had to go. Grown people were thankful for the distance they had travelled, and the triumphs left behind were a guarantee of the victories still before."

"Think of the things we have to be thankful for. We have life, health, intelligence and happy homes, and parents who have provided us with all we need. We have helpful teachers, and teachers and loyal companions. We have farms, prosperous businesses and decent honest occupations. The rich and blood of life was coursing through our veins; our heart was throbbing with vitality. Our eyes looked out on God's beautiful world, and we could see winding creeks, verdant rivers, placid lakes, tumbling waterfalls, and the surge of the surf on the rock-bound shore."

"A marvellous earth was beneath our feet and a wonderful sky above our heads. The sun shone to give us light and heat and send us forth to life and the darkness led to send us home lest we should sap our strength too soon."

Surely all this truly something to be thankful for. We turned from natural comforts to the things that man's genius had given us we had still cause for gratitude. Trains, boats, flying machines and rapid transportation of men, merchandise, and messages. We had schools, colleges, universities, and churches. Banks art galleries and museums and a thousand other things that the people of 500 years ago knew nothing about. There had never been an age that had more cause for gratitude to God than the present one."

"Three special blessings that call for thankfulness at this time are National peace and prosperity. Peace and prosperity in the home and Social peace and prosperity."

Space forbids us to give the whole sermon, but it was listened to with great interest.

"DON'T TELL THE WIFE" starring Irene Rich, is a Warner Bros.
production of this novel

It formed too, a fitting social background for the tournament of jealousy, the eye and wit jousts of the host and four of his guests and for the delighted scandal mongering through the medium of furtive nudges and covert whispers of the remainder of that smartest of smart society parties.

Abner Gratman was counting the dragging hours until these communal gatherings would be over for that night and the week-enders would be asleep in their respective cabins.

Then he could go about the spicy business of his trust with Joan.

Joan with her mature beauty and marble skin, as proud and definitely calm as Clare was restless and brazen under the ever watchful eyes that table round, felt herself treading on the edge of an uncertain abyss.

Given as much to quick tears as to swift rages, Joan silently fought within herself the question of whether to melt into weeping or indulge a tantrum viciously by surrendering herself without constraint or reservation to the consuming impulse of the hour—surge of her heart promised in Abner's long beckoning arms.

Joan was quite sure of her own mind. She loved Abner. Body and soul she desired him.

But it was provoking to see her hand even though she did not love HIM any more, passing wholly and shamelessly into the wily toils of an adventurer. It was one thing for Joan to fall in love, extraneously, herself, but to have the humiliation of seeing Ranny race her publicly, neck and neck—or rather, necker and necker—along the primrose path of dalliance, aroused at least a point of pride.

It was not that she cared. Joan moved to herself, but it would have been so much more decent if the thing had been done with clean hands—if Ranny had gotten a divorce and given her the freedom she needed to consummate her new love without deception.

One thing she had always admired about Ranny was his consistent disinterestedness in women since their marriage even after their quarrels had attained the status of utter and unbridgeable incompatibility. Much as Joan had wanted the divorce she secretly admired the innate fineness which kept Ranny from ill-treatments.

Now suddenly in one full swoop Ranny had apparently cast aside all his inhibitions and reverted to crude and unrefined first principles.

But there were compensations in being disillusioned, Joan felt, for over and above her hurt pride she grew conscious of a sense of being unshackled.

Henceforth Ranny's exemplary loyalty to their marriage vows, added to her own spirit about such things, had kept her from cheating. Now, divorce or no divorce, she considered that Ranny's patent desertion of his ideals his lapse from their joint loyalties, unfettered her own actions.

Joan, therefore began to count the hours until she could be alone with Abner after quietude had descended upon all its passengers except these two whose hearts beat for each other alone.

Joan bent upon Abner a glance as affectionate and caressing as those she had been casting at Ranny and Clare were icy.

It made Abner's pulses leap and his impatience strain at all bounds. Clare meanwhile was continuing her desperate play for Ranny.

When the seating arrangement placed her next to Stivner she had arbitrarily usurped the place of another guest next to Ranny and refused to surrender it. (There could be no denying favors to that sweet baby voice, that wistfully pleading smile, both of which could assume an adamant underground fall in love, extraneously, herself, but to have the humiliation of seeing Ranny race her publicly, neck and neck—or rather, necker and necker—along the primrose path of dalliance, aroused at least a point of pride.)

swept through the chaff and penetrated right to the gist of the situation. Bitingly, Clay had reviewed the developments. Ranny was making a public ass of himself. He had come on this cruise solely and notably because it offered an excellent chance to entrap the interloper, Abner Gratman, who was stealing his wife of his heart from him; because it afforded an opportunity to begin a campaign to re-interest his wife and win back her love.

Yet here he was letting himself be made a donkey of by a designing little bundle of sophisticated and trouble making femininity!

Here he was forgetting the aim and end of the serious business in hand under the spell of baby dumb eyes! Here he was forsaking the role of a man for that of a donkey.

A man defending the sanctity of his marriage contract and the virtue of his wife, descending to senseless philandering himself!

And what was Stivner thinking, did Ranny imagine. Stivner who wanted Clare! Stivner, with whom Ranny earnestly desired to become associated in a business way!

Was the thwarting billionaire lumber king in an affair of the heart, even as he had recently failed him in the matter of the polo wager a sensible way for Ranny to endeavor to achieve social and business success with Stivner.

Stivner's whole career was a record of having broken the reckless men who tried to stand in his way! And Stivner's heart was even now a seething furnace of jealous fires, while the frail blonde flower of his most ardent desires leaned toward another sun.

Thus Clay had raved, and Ranny's head had bowed and his eyes had lowered under the storm for the proverbial "Dutch Uncle" had nothing on Clay when it came to delivering a hair-raising bawling out, a crackling piece of his mind!

Ranny who was but a boy at heart writhed under the lash of Clay's tongue like a lad under parental whed chastisement.

It had dusted the nonsense from his pants—his mind, that is—and chased the seductive spell of Clare's whimsical enchantment from his eyes.

Heart soul and mind he had become the concise and straight fighting Ranny Forbes once more. The strong male seeking to wreak the vengeance of his hands upon the invader of his hearthstone.

Narrow-eyed Ranny sat through dinner anticipating the moment when he and Clay could set their trap for Abner and Joan, spring it, entangle Abner's sly steps and finally submit the cad to the punishment they had devised as meet and fitting for such as he.

Almost early in his outward aspect Ranny maintained a steady and searching scrutiny of Abner until that worthy lost most of his insolent self-assurance and was driven almost to jumping out of his skin with uneasiness.

Here again Clay intervened with swift kicks on Ranny's shins under the table, covertly signaling to him to desist lest Abner take warning and abort their plot.

In Mrs. Clare Clemenceau's little blonde cranium, however, as she sensed the sudden collapse of Ranny's interest in her and calculated the reason therefore there was no thought of surrendering so easily and readily the grip she had so carefully laid upon him.

Smile and lip still concealed the true trend of her thoughts but inwardly she was gloating upon the realization that Ranny had publicly committed himself to her interest now to a degree from which he would not well withdraw—without trouble, and lots of it.

CHAPTER X

On Livingstone Stivner's floating palace the social amenities were as well preserved, the routine as well ordered as in the most fastidious mansions ashore.

Accordingly after dinner the men marshalled behind Stivner and withdrew to the smoking room for cigars and coffee while the women retired to the drawing room for cigarettes, coffee and scandalous gossip.

Inasmuch as the men, too, were not averse to an exchange of spicy chat, the main difference between the two post-dinner gatherings lay in what they smoked.

Ranny and Clay hursting with eagerness to absent themselves at the first opportunity and go about the preparation of their man-trap welcomed this splitting up as much as Clare resented it.

Clare, in fact petulantly and peremptorily demanded of Stivner that he recognize the modernist view of sex equality by having both men and women "congregate in the smoking room. Stivner, however stoutly insisted upon the sacred inviolableness of the smoking room as the one and only place on the Speedwell barred to the dainty feet of ladies.

The sex division of the party therefore was complete and entire but for one factor.

Joan Forbes pleading a bit of a headache and a consequent indisposition for coffee-cup conversation excused herself and, escaped to the outside deck.

Abner, conveying nondescript excuses to Stivner, hastily followed her. The maneuver was so broad that every pair of eyes in the remainder of that party shot quizzically to Ranny Forbes' face.

Knowing full well his temper and sets one and all expected an immediate scene, a delightfully scandalous eruption. Nothing short of the pitching overboard of Abner!

Ranny however, prolonged the spicy expectant agony of the mongers by pretending to take no notice of what had occurred—at cost of what a struggle only Clay and he knew.

With a raging internal tornado held in leash by an iron will behind an external appearance of cool unconcern and innocence, Ranny strolled along with the other men down to the smoking room and joined in the general conversation there.

The instant he had quit the presence of the ladies their tongues wagged in wild little-tattle regardless of Clare's presence.

"Phew!" giggled Dowager Telfens. "I have visions of my picture in the paper as a witness to the crime. Dear me, I do, hope they spell my name correctly!"

Meanwhile by no untoward word or glance or gesture did Ranny in the slightest manner betray repudiation or apprehension as to the thin ice over which his wife was flauntingly skating. It was a magnificent and unselfish exhibition of public faith in her conduct!

But deep in the grim glance he exchanged with Clay lay in the reason wherein he found moral courage in this crisis.

For his hour of vengeance was at hand!

The smoking room of the Speedwell, though ostensibly masculine in tone, was no less beautiful than any other part of that most magnificent of yachts.

Ranny and Clay, however, were not in the mood for lounging. They had work to do—grim work.

As soon as they could do so without attracting undue attention they slipped out of the smoking room.

The Speedwell was so arranged that most of the living rooms and the owner's apartment were one deck below the bridge superstructure—half a deck down to be exact, from the lounge and the main promenade—while the guest staterooms ranged along the forward three-quarter of the deck below. Aft of these were the crew quarters, and in the hold, still lower were the engine room, the bunkers and other necessary though unlovely portions of a great sea-going private yacht.

Ranny and Clay were thus able to make their way down to the Forbes' suite without venturing upon deck where they might have encountered Abner and Joan. They did not want to see that precious cad and his misguided consort—just yet.

After assuring themselves that Joan and Abner were not in the suite, nor spooning upon the private sundeck, Clay locked the sitting room door to the passageway while Ranny hastily fetched from his cabin a small package.

OUTSIDE ADVERTISING

The Lussend-Despatch says—

Being in the business we naturally are a firm believer in advertising.

But we believe in well planned, well timed and well directed advertising and not in the haphazard blind groping for some vague object with an advertisement to which practically no thought has been given, as in the case of the community advertisement given to the Saskatoon Star a few days ago.

We can readily grant that a well planned, persistent advertising campaign in a daily paper would be of great value to the community but to attribute reasonable efficacy to one will effort at community publicity of a type that has become too common would be to deny every fundamental principle of the advertising art. It is like firing defective ammunition out of a good gun at a hidden target.

It is not good reasoning to suppose that advertising in provincial dailies will attract good settlers from any inner parts of the province for we could hardly expect well to do farmers from the prosperous districts to come here and we fail to see any advantage in promoting the influx of any other type.

If this community wants to spend money in outside advertising we would suggest that a systematic campaign be conducted in some large United States daily where Canadian advertising would compel attention and stand a reasonable chance of justifying the expenditure involved. The Despatch has previously made suggestions along this line, but—

"Skin-game" is about all we need say. We have been at fault right in the Wainwright Star Office but once was once too often. The next smooth guy got a different reception.

The local paper beats all the city dailies in the world if you want to get your message to the home folk. If you want to reach the outside you must use outside mediums, but its no use using suckers. Business men all over the province have bit on this "skin-game" and we really think it is still true what Barnum said: "One born every minute."

We have in the Star and in our home life, practised what we have preached—Buy at Home.

Had a few hundred dollars contributed to the city daily been left in the hands of the local paper, much of it would have been spent at home. In our case members of the family and firm do a lot of spending. How much does the city papers do here?

Wainwright business men can do much more business if they do more well planned advertising. And this applies in every town. And it is only fair to the editor of a paper which has stood behind the "Buy at Home" slogan to give him all the printing work of the town and district.

HONOR FOR CHIEF-SCOUTS

Sir Robert Baden-Powell, K.C.B., C.M.V.O., Chief Scout of the world and founder of the Boy Scout movement has been nominated by the selection committee of the Nobel Peace Prize, as a candidate for the next award on account of his untiring efforts towards international peace.

The movement started in England by Sir Robert nineteen years ago, with the idea of giving boys a training in character, citizenship service for others and a love of clean sport and woodcraft has been so successful that it has spread to practically every country in the world. Millions of boys and girls as members of the Boy Scout and Girl Guide organizations of their respective countries are learning the lesson of international brotherhood through their promise and law, which embodies in its tenets that "A Scout is a friend to all and a brother to every other Scout" no matter what colour, class, country or creed he belongs to.

Endorsed by the Council of the League of Nations as a most potent factor towards goodwill amongst the young people of the world, and given representation on its committees, the Scout and Guide movement has been rightly styled the "Junior League of Peace." The recommendation for the premier award of the world for promoting peace among nations is a fitting tribute to Sir Robert Baden-Powell.

This world-famous British officer, retiring from active service for his country after an honourable and strenuous career that brought him to the top of his profession has given nearly twenty years of what he might have rightly claimed as his own, to the betterment of the world through the organization of the Boy Scouts and Girl Guides—Herald.

REDUCE NUMBER AUTO ACCIDENTS

The attention of the public may properly be drawn to the observations made at the annual convention of the Canadian Good Roads Association on the subject of automobile accidents.

In the last few years it was said there has been an appalling increase in the sacrifice of human life by automobiles.

Something must be done, it was added to check the recklessness on public highways and the disregard for human life, which have piled up a ghastly toll of deaths in recent months along Canadian highways.

"I think we are all agreed," the Minister of Highways for Ontario said, "that the greatest and most difficult problem we have to face is to see that the awful toll of needlessly wasted life is reduced to a minimum."

Hon. Mr. Perron, Minister of Highways for Quebec, who has directed that speeders' licenses be taken from them on conviction made these remarks: "We have been building roads for many years; we have erected safety signs; we have done what can be made to make those highways safe, but it appears that we have been unable in any province to make people understand that life must be protected and that a license to operate an automobile is not a license to kill other people. It has become a national duty for us to stop the needless waste of life that has been going on and which for the most part has been due to recklessness on the part of the drivers and to their bad behavior on the road."

He declared that everything possible should be done "to stop a condition that has become intolerable."

BLIND OF PROVINCE ASK GOVERNMENT PENSION INSURANCE

EDMONTON — Pensions for the blind were asked for by a delegation of Alberta blind men that waited upon Premier Brownlee. The delegation included men from McMurray, Wetaskinew, Stettler and Calgary, in addition to local representatives and the case in their behalf was presented by J. W. McNab of the Canadian Federation of the Blind, who stated that there are more than 100 blind persons in this province.

The handicapped under which the blind have to live and work are so great it was claimed by Mr. McNab that a pension system is the only way of satisfactorily meeting their needs for only in rare cases can they earn full livelihood for themselves. Pensions of this sort are now being paid in several of the American states notably by Kansas and Kentucky and by many foreign countries including Japan. What is desired in this country, Mr. McNab pointed out, is some form of insurance against the loss of sight to apply all over Canada.

A charge of about 10 cents per capita per year would be sufficient to pay $500 a year to every blind man over 40 years of age and $250 to those under 40. The insurance companies would handle the business, and the scheme would be administered on straight annuity lines. Failing some such system as this a pension of $10 a week to blind men over 40 and a graduated scale for younger men was suggested.

Emphasis was laid on the fact however that from the standpoint of the blind men themselves who would like to have relief provided on insurance rather than charity lines, it is desirable to make the scheme Dominion wide, with Alberta assuming its proportionate share of the cost.

Premier Brownlee expressed his sympathy with the case of the blind men and promised to see that the matter is taken up at the inter-provincial conference in Ottawa next month. A question of Dominion and provincial responsibilities being involved.

DO NOT LISTEN TO GET-RICH-QUICK SCHEMES

The Yorkton Enterprise expresses the sentiments of The Star in the following paragraph:

"The splendid crop now being harvested in this district is being made the excuse for the activities of a host of salesmen from outside cities who are going about the towns and country districts pushing the sale of all sorts of things. Farmers and others would be well advised to waste no time listening to these people. After the crop has been harvested and the amount of revenue it will bring has been ascertained and after local obligations have been met, it is time enough to consider investments of this character. We have a good crop but that is no reason for allowing get-rich quick schemers in the country to share in it."

ATLANTIC PHONE SERVICE LAUDED

LONDON — The inauguration of trans-Atlantic telephone conversation between London England and Ottawa Canada, is given wide publicity in the newspapers here.

All stress the fact that it means the development of a better understanding between the Dominion and the Mother Country.

There is also considerable satisfaction that Canada is now in direct communication instead of having to depend on the United States.

The American telephone service has slashed a little lately probably due to the return of American tourists and it is expected that Canadian service will be used more for commercial purposes than happened at the beginning when the Americans regarded it as an expensive novelty. Should the traffic justify it a reduction in rates is likely in the future but not at present.

TARZAN A "PET" OF SOCIETY WOMAN

Tarzan the beautiful white horse ridden by Ken Maynard, First National star in "The Overland Stage" at the theatre tonight and Thursday has something of a history. He was once the property of a wealthy woman in San Francisco who became a financial reverse; had to part with her pet. She cried to see him go and no doubt if Maynard who has a tender heart had been the purchaser at that time the "deal" would not have gone through — or he would have given the horse back to her. But a couple of days later the beautiful Tarzan from his mistress, and sold him again to Maynard — at a fine profit.

"The Overland Stage" is from the story by Marion Jackson. The cast includes Kathleen Collins as leading lady.

The First National company directed by Albert Russell journeyed first to Deadwood, S.D., where the great pageant and celebration of "The Days of '76" was filmed as a cognate part of the story.

Rocking the baby by motor is now possible in an attachment fitted to the carriage. It rocks the body of the buggy from side to side and also rolls the entire vehicle alternately forward and backward. Controls are provided for regulating the action and one started the outfit requires no attention.

Toast at the rate of twenty-four to fifty slices per minute, depending upon the condition of the bread, is browned in an electric unit for which patents have been sought. It has rollers like those of a wringer.

Rubber walls in office buildings to decrease vibrations and streets and sidewalks paved with rubber are among the recent uses chemists have found for the product. They have also adapted the material to the making of interior decorations.

Canadian Boy is King's Chorister

When the boys of the King's Chapel of St. George at Windsor and the Gentlemen of the Westminster Abbey Choir toured Canada this year on special Canadian Pacific train, the very Rev. Dr. Bailey, Dean of the Chapel and Rev. Canon Dr. Fellows were much impressed by the singing of Robert Charles Palmer, an 11-year-old Edmonton boy trained by V. P. Delapour, organist and chorister of Holy Trinity Church, Edmonton, South. Later in the year his parents, Colonel and Mrs. R. H. Palmer were notified that their son had been appointed a probationer in the choir of the King's Chapel of St. George. After a period of 12 months he will be taken into full membership as King's Chorister. Master Palmer who thus becomes part of an aggregation which charmed Canadian hearers right across Canada, sailed on Canadian Pacific steamer Minnedosa for England in August to take up his new duties. The tale is unique in the history of the choir which has drawn its members for the past six hundred years exclusively from boys resident in Great Britain, and whose first trip outside the British Isles in six centuries of existence was the one undertaken to Canada this year.

ARE PARENTS PEOPLE

ARTICLE TWO.

(Published by arrangement with Canadian Social Hygiene Council)

1. Does the present-day parent compare favorably or unfavorably with the parent of past generations?
2. To what extent can parents be blamed for juvenile delinquency? And in what respects?

3. Can a parent by controlling environment and companionship, mould the character of the child as desired?
4. Do you believe in the principle of parent education? If so, what should it include?

5. At what age do you think parent education should start? Should it be before or after marriage?

6. Do you think the inclusion of health as a major topic in a parent education scheme might do much to increase the physical well-being of the country?

BY HON W. F. ROBERTS M.D.
Formerly Minister of Health for New Brunswick.

I am absolutely in sympathy with this movement. If ever the world needed this form of education, specifically to prevent the future fall of the British Empire, and, for that matter, the white race, it is at any moment. There is today no such thing as the home as we knew it thirty-five years ago.

1 The latter.

2 To a very marked extent. Parents time is being taken up with the demands made upon them by society and with amusement, resulting in a lack of good home influence.

3 Parents need frank and free education first. Then they can prove of service to their children—until then no.

4 Yes—all that pertains to the laying of a foundation for a sane and healthy home, physically, morally and mentally.

LET BUSINESS

GO HANG

It is rather wonderful, this view from my hotel window. "The lake is wine dark"—to be semi-classic for once and quote somebody, and the wind flicks the tiny wavelets in a way that warms my heart. Yep! I'm going to continue my trip tomorrow and stop to fish at some jolly little stream, its waters cold as ice. But water brings back memories of fish and Prohibition.

You who have watched the golden juice of the grape "shimmy" up and down the hollow stem of a wine glass and felt its glorious kiss run through your veins, know—that as a beverage water is a damn failure. Thank goodness they haven't taken any gasoline away from us yet—not yet. When they do the first hundred years of a man's life will be mighty hard.

When you contemplate going on a tour you first figure out where you are going, what you are going to take along and what condition your car is in to make the trip. As you go over the car, cleaning and inspecting it, a lot of tools that you are going to carry will suggest themselves. For instance, the following list is essential: Tire chains, jack, rim wrench, tire pump, valve tool vulcanizer, fine sand paper, all wrenches belonging to the car, two monkey wrenches, large and small, screw driver, pliers, small vise to clamp on running board small and large file, short handled axe, tow rope grease gun and oil can, small funnel ball of twine trouble lamp and pocket ammeter. This list is practically complete and any ordinary repairs can be made with these tools. Now comes the spare parts; two tires and inner tubes two gallon can of extra gasoline, two quart can of engine oil, a can of grease and a small can of kerosene, blowout patch and tire repairing outfit extra valve caps, dustcaps, headlight bulbs and tail light bulbs, 10 feet insulated wire, roll of tape, 4 extra spark plugs, bundle of waste, assortment of gaskets to fit car radiator hose extra fan belt, and an assortment of cotter pins, nuts, lock washers wood screws and nails.

In wrapping these things they should be packed so that they will go into the tool box, the side pockets of the car and under the seats, ready to be located at a moment's notice.

WARNING AGAINST PEDDLARS

A warning is sounded against peddlars by the National Editorial Association not only because of the nuisance to housewives but because of a bigger hazard attached to their visits. It says "It is asserted by peace officers that many of the house canvassers are simply acting as advance agents for organized gangs of robbers and house breakers, who act on information secured through the personal visit. It is equally true that many peddlars of the present day, driven to desperation by the lack of business, have been involved in direct swindles and hold-ups. Warnings at frequent intervals will undoubtedly have a tendency to make the housewives more cautious as to who gains admittance into her home."

SEEKING LAND IN CANADA

This photograph, taken outside the Union Station, Winnipeg, is of a group of prominent United States farmers, who have been looking over settlement prospects in Saskatchewan and some of whom have purchased land. They were brought to Canada in September by Capt. L. B. Boyd, superintendent of the land, colonization and development department of the Canadian National Railways at St. Paul, Minnesota, and were interested in the Eaton, Tyner Valley and Snipe Lake districts, on the Canadian National Railways. Their excursion resulted in the purchase of 16 quarter sections valued at $56,320, and a number of other deals are pending. These farmers belong to the States of Nebraska and Kansas and are all well established and possessors of considerable capital. Some of them have relatives and friends already settled in the Tyner Valley district and have been urged by them to come to Canada. Others, not moving themselves, are taking land for their sons.

First Aid Champions of C.P.R. Lines

The Shagheeny grand challenge cup, emblematic of the First Aid Champions for all lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was carried off recently by the Toronto Freight Offices in competition with the Western Shops of Winnipeg, holders of the western lines cup. The competition took place at the Place Viger Hotel in Montreal recently between the two teams who were declared winners of eastern and western lines competitions held prior to the final tests. The winning team secured a total of 419 points out of a possible 610, while the Winnipeg team were 16 points behind. The competitions were in accordance with the St. John Ambulance Association requirements. In addition to the all lines championship, the Toronto Freight Offices team was winner this year of the Wallace Nesbitt Cup won in competition with over 40 teams from all railroad organizations in Canada and the states of Maine and Michigan.

NEWEST SCIENCE

Ordinary canoes can be quickly transformed into "unsinkable" boats by attaching inflated rubber supports to the sides. The bags are of cloth and rubber, about four feet long and six inches wide and can easily be blown up with the breath. When deflated they fit in the pocket.

More effective aid for aviators while landing in fogs is promised in a beacon light being developed by eastern engineers. It is a neon-gas type of lamp affording illumination through the glow of the vapor rather than by a filament, and the pinkish color of the light is said to be much more successful in penetrating fogs and mists.

Designed especially for the automobile driver, a pair of very wide rimmed glasses, now on the market has a small mirror on each side so that the driver can see the road behind him. The reflectors do not interfere with the vision ahead and are backed up with material like that of the frame.

To maintain a supply of hot water for the home an electric belt has been introduced in England. It is simply strapped about the tank and warms the water above it by heat caused by the resistance to the passage of the current through the conductor which is adapted to 500 750 or 1,000 watts. An asbestos-lined cover if desired, two belts may be used on the same container to insure more abundant supply of heat.

SYNOPSIS

Bob Ward, poor college student, working as a dancing partner for rich women, falls in love with Sally Smith, a cigarette girl. She warns him against the mysterious and beautiful Mrs. Hammond, habitué of the roadhouse, who finds her "thrill" in "hunting" Bob, who, however, trusts her. She offers him free use of her secret apartment. Bob quarrels with Sally over the offer. He returns later to Sally's house, only to find she has gone to a wild party at the home of Mazie Revere, where Aldrich, a financier, goes upon Sally.

CHAPTER XV—Continued—Aldrich leaned eagerly close to Sally, and his voice became thick with the rising lust that gorged his veins as he feasted his desires upon her lovely innocence:

"You won't be sorry if you're alone to me?" he promised.

Sally did not know just what he meant, but she said, quite naturally and instinctively:

"If it's anything important, I guess I'd have to talk it over with Bob first, Mr. Aldrich. Bob is very sensible, you know!"

"Indeed! No, I never suspected it!" remarked Aldrich dryly. "And who, may I ask, is Bob?"

"Bob—Bob Ward, the football player, you know," declared Sally proudly. "Is the boy I'm in love with!"

Then all of a sudden Sally felt that the effects of the first drink she had had the second one that Aldrich was pressing on her hand.

Bob swung his heavy right fist with no apparent effort, without strain, yet, meeting Hammond's chin, it drove him back and to the floor in an unconscious heap. Aldrich leaped at Bob, following that, and smashed him behind the ear; others of the twelve best clubmen rallied loyally into the fray.

While Mazie screamed, and Madame Leonine screamed, and the living statues screamed, and every female except Sally screamed, Bob went to work on the clubmen. Sally sat white of face, terror-stricken, fascinated, as she saw him smash one after the other without regard for social positions into an indiscriminate heap upon the floor. Twelve best clubmen knocked out in a row!

Now he was facing her again, breathing a little harder, sneering into her horrified face.

"I came here to take you from these people, to take you home. But I don't think you're worth taking home. You, who talked so hypocritically of Mrs. Hammond! Why you're not a man; you're a male creature! For that's what it would mean, nothing less, even though Bob did not know it, or at least pretended not to know it."

On her stubborn nerve alone, on an hysterical reticence of wave of resentment and bitterness, Sally had doused the beautiful things Hammond had sent to her and had permitted him to take her to Mazie's. Unnaturally cold without, she was heartbroken within.

Sally had come to the party and mingled with the strange and unknown guests. Not until she had, in her tangled emotional state, sat alone with Aldrich and allowed him to persuade her to take a drink had her brave little reserve been penetrated.

The bitter heartbreak rushed through the breach. Oh, little Sally Smith felt so miserable to think that her short week of romance had ended in this wise; that her Prince Charming had deserted her and left her to wander alone and friendless amid such dangers as Mazie Revere's party and guests.

She no longer thought of Wall Street; she thought of him as a brazen man, who was leering repressively, desirously, at her naked white shoulders. She folded her arms protectively over her lowest bosom and covered her slim shoulders with her slender hands and struggled with an impulse to weep.

She wished that Bob would come into her life again as he had that memorable afternoon, so shortly passed, and buoy her up again out of her surroundings on wings of romance. Also, her young dream between these two was still forced over, she felt.

She felt very reckless, very desperate; hastily, as much to hide her emotions as to satisfy a thirst, she seized up her glass and drained.

It. And the salt tears mingled with the beverage.

There was a commotion in the living room, off the roof garden. Aldrich, whose dynastic life was untouched by commotions of any sort except those his presence or power caused, never even bothered to look or listen. Sally was quite too befuddled to notice. He leaned across the table and, seeking to take advantage of her patent emotional upset, whispered:

"Little girl, you're troubled. You need a friend. Let me be a friend to you!"

After all, why not reasoned little Sally Smith, in her state of mind where she knew not reason. Hadn't Bob taken a friend—Mrs. Hammond? Why shouldn't little Sally have a new friend—Mr. Aldrich?

Aldrich was patting her hands now, atop the table. Sally, with closed eyes and head bowed, was beginning to have to fight against an overwhelming sense to do two things at once—cry and sleep!

Then the commotion exploded right at hand. A bulky, racing figure shouldered out from the living room, throwing off mads and butlers, guests and Mazie, who sought to stop his progress. He banged a great hit on the table between little Sally Smith and wealthy Mr. Aldrich—a bang that snapped Sally out of her fog and caused Mr. Aldrich to leap to his feet, unstrung for all his billions.

Sally blinked. Sure enough, it was Bob. She was glad to see him—but, say, was she? What was that black, murderous look in his eyes? That bitterly accusing glare? Her cry of relief aborted on her quivering lips as Bob's first words assailed her ears.

"You were a fine one to try and preach to me about Mrs. Hammond! You, who come to place like this—and my God!—get drunk! Little Sally, you've opened my eyes. You're!"

A hand was placed on Bob's shoulder, tried to push him around. Bob turned a baleful glance upon the interposer. It was Tom Manton, snarling:

"See here, you, what the devil do you mean by talking to my girl like that!"

Bob swung his heavy right fist with no apparent effort, without strain, yet, meeting Manton's chin, it drove him back and to the floor in an unconscious heap. Aldrich leaped at Bob, following that, and smashed him behind the ear; others of the twelve best clubmen rallied loyally into the fray.

While Mazie screamed, and Madame Leonine screamed, and the living statues screamed, and every female except Sally screamed, Bob went to work on the clubmen.
